GRANTSMANSHIP
Online Graduate Certificate

Use these eight-week online graduate courses to hone your research development and grantsmanship skills. Based in Mizzou’s Graduate School, this course series will help graduate students, postdoctoral fellows, young university faculty members, and new research development personnel to develop real-world skills in an accredited program.

Four-Course Series

- Grant Writing I
- Grant Writing II
- Sponsor Relationships
- Grant Award Management

The first two courses are prerequisites for the remaining two offerings. Each course is three credit hours. The four certificate courses feature collaborative group work and will help you develop such important skills as the following:

- identifying potential sponsors;
- assessing the fit of potential funding opportunities;
- planning and managing the process of proposal development and submission;
- cultivating sponsor relationships with an understanding of the cultures of grant making across the full range of public and private sector sponsors;
- planning and communicating requests for Congressional earmarks;
- understanding the award cycle and planning project reports and new proposals accordingly; and,
- managing the roles of partner organizations.
